A DREAM,

After viewing the Ruins of the Public Buildings in Washington.

The scenes of conflagration which by day Excited feelings painful to convey, Appear'd in sleep, and faintly disclose The pleasing vision which in dreams arose.

High on the Capitol's smear'd smoky wall, Midst frustur'd columns of the Congress Hall, Columbia sat; full frequent heav'd the sigh, And grief's dull languor floated in her eye.

With wild emotion every feature wrought, Her air was sorrow and her look was thought; Lo! smiling Liberty, with heavenly grace, And form angelic, gives the warm embrace.

"Mourn not, she said, the Vandals, savage flame, A lasting tarnish to th' invader's fame— 'To just revenge: thy children it inspires, 'And makes them emulate their sainted sires

"Extend your view, o'er lakes, o'er seas, o'er lands, 'Triumphant every where, behold your bands, 'Whole fleets are taken, and whole armies yield, 'Before your youth vain veterans fly the field.

"Even in sight of Albion's cliffs your fleet, 'Seeks the proud ruler of the waves to meet, 'My spirit gives an energy divine, 'And makes your sons all former deeds out-shine."

Now an effulgent burst of western light, And gilded clouds wide spreading struck my sight;

Justice descends, but as she nearer drew, A blaze of glory hid her from my view.

I heard a voice, th' solemn, soft with love, Pronounce she came commission'd from above, 'Droop not Columbia, she exclaimed, but trust

The power Almighty, for your cause is just, 'The machinations of the bad shall fail, 'The force of numbers be of no avail, 'Our God shall shield thy chosen band from harm,

"Our God protect thee with his out stretch'd arm— 'This city he'er by foes shall be undone, 'Which bears the name of Washington"

As this methought a peal of triumph rung, A New Edifice in splendor sprung, Like Phoenix from its ashes, and a sound Of Victory and Peace loud rose around;

Cannons, troops, trophies and wild joy's uproar, Caus'd strange emotions never felt before; Sudden I woke—all glowing with delight, And full of faith in presage of the night,

One Dove to Noah in the deluge bore, The welcome token of discover'd shore; Two Harbingers from sanctioning Heaven appear'd,

That sorrowful Columbia might be cheer'd. O may it be the Almighty's gracious will, This pleasing Vision quickly to fulfil.
