THE BACHELOR'S WISH.

Let others praise a beautiful face,
The features of the fair;
I look for spirit in her eyes,
And meaning in her air.

What tho' she seem quite sweet and mild,
With color fresh as morn;
An innocent and harmless child
As ever yet was born.

This will not kindle my desire,
Nor make me wish to wed;
Least ignorance should quench the fire,
Which wisdom would have fed.

What tho' her shape be faultless too,
And carriage alarode,
Her manner pleasing to the view,
When'er she walks abroad.

The charming puppet may pass by,
Or gently fall and rise;
It will not hurt my peace, for I
Have ears as well as eyes.

I want to know the inward state
And temper of her mind;
If she will pout, or rage, or fret,
Be gentle or unkind.

If her discourse be calm and staid,
And judgment rule for life;
Nonsense may charm us in a maid,
But never in a wife.

I love to see a female friend,
Who looks as if she thought;
Who on her household will attend,
And do what'er she ought.

A quaker plainness in her dress,
Kitchen and servants clean;
Provision neither in excess,
Nor scandalously mean.

O could I such a female find,
Such treasure in a wife,
I'd pass my days to peace resign'd,
Nor fear the ills of life.

THE VIPER AND LAMPREY.

The following is translated from Le Nouveau Antenor, a work published in France in 1833.

The viper, a land serpent, burns with love for the lamprey, an animal that lives in the water. When the season excites them to enjoy the fruits of their mutual flame, the viper, which is the male, repairs to the banks of the river, and by his long and continued hissings, calls up the lamprey. She no sooner hears the signal, than she hastens from her liquid retirement, but does not go immediately to meet her spouse; she knows that he bears death in the fury of his caresses, and that his fangs ooze a fatal poison. Thus she contents herself by barely showing herself on some adjacent rock, surrounded by water, whence she can regard him. Then perceiving the just alarm that detains her, he vomits his poison upon the sand. As soon as she finds herself relieved from her fears, she runs to join him—they embrace, kiss each other, and love intoxicates them with pleasure.

The above was considered to be true by Theopompus Oppien, Philcus, and many other Greeks.
