FOR THE ADVERTISER.

THE MEETING.

AGAIN with joy I meet thee here,
And all my thoughts of love impart;
When distant far from one so dear,
Thy lov'd idea fill'd my heart.

When "souls congenial" joyful meet,
Who once with sorrow bade "ADIEU,"
They breathe their love in accents sweet,
And pledge their mutual faith anew.

What though thy presence oft has grac'd
Those charming scenes remote from me;
Yet all the scenes which I have trac'd,
Has not remov'd my love for thee.

Oh busy mem'ry trac'd the scene
When last we bade a sad adieu,
And oft the night's delusive dream,
"Inapell'd my anxious thoughts to you."

No longer cruel fate shall rend
The tender sympathizing heart;
Our mutual bliss shall never end,
For we shall never never part.

Porter's Journal.

FROM THE ANALECTIC MAGAZINE.

We have been favoured with a copy of Captain Porter's journal of his late adventurous and gallant cruise.—Those who have hitherto admired him only as the hero of Valparaiso, will doubtless be pleased to see our American Anson in another character; like Cooke observing the manners and habits of newly discovered savages. After describing the appearance and situation of the bay and harbour of Noocheevah, or Madison's Island, and having fortunately obtained an interpreter, in an Englishman of the name of Wilson, who had been long resident in this group of islands, he thus proceeds:]

On jumping on shore, unaccompanied by any other persons, and walking up to a group of the natives, all their apprehensions seemed to cease; the women, who had retired to a distance, came down to join the male natives, and even the landing of the marines, as well as the rest of the party, did not seem to occasion any uneasiness among them. The drum appeared to give them much pleasure, and the regular movements of the marines occasioned great astonishment; they said they were spirits, or beings of a superior class to other men. I directed them to go through their exercise, and the firing of muskets occasioned but little terror, except among the women, who generally turned away their faces, covering their ears with their hands. The men and boys were all attention to the skipping of the balls in the water; but at every fire, all habitually inclined their bodies, as if to avoid the shot, although behind the men who were firing. After remaining a short time with them, I distributed among them some knives, fish hooks, &c. &c. which they received with apparent pleasure, but no one offered, like the natives of the other islands, any thing in return.

Observing the mountains surrounding the valley to be covered with numerous groups of natives, I enquired the cause, and was informed that a warlike tribe, residing beyond the mountain had been for several weeks at war with the natives of the valley, into which they had made several incursions, and destroyed many houses and plantations, and killed by cutting round the bark, a great number of bread-fruit trees. I was also informed that they intended paying another visit that day, but it was supposed they had been deterred by the appearance of the ships.—I enquired if it were possible to get a message to them, and was informed that notwithstanding they were at war, and shewed no quarter to each other, there were certain persons of both tribes who were permitted to pass and repass freely and uninterrupted from one tribe to another, such for example, as a man belonging to one tribe who had married a woman belonging to another, I enquired if any such were present, and one being pointed out to me, I directed him to proceed to the Hapahs, and to tell them I had come with a force sufficiently strong to drive them from the island, and if they presumed to enter the valley while I remained there, I should send a body of men to chastise them—to tell them to cease all hostilities as long as I remained among them; that if they had dogs or fruit to dispose of, they might come and trade freely with us, as I should not permit the natives of the valley to injure or molest them. To the natives of the valley (who listened attentively, and with apparent pleasure, to the message sent to the Hapahs) I then addressed myself, and assured them that I had come with the most friendly disposition, that I wanted nothing from them but what I paid for, that they must look upon us as brethren, and that I should protect them against the Hapahs, should they again venture to descend the mountains. I directed them to leave at home their spears, slings, and clubs, (their only weapons of war, in order that we might know them from the Hapahs) and that I should consider all as my enemies, who should appear armed in my presence, assuring them at the same time, that there would be no necessity for their using those weapons; as I had not only the will and power to give them ample protection, but to chastise severely their enemies, unless they were governed by the advice I had given them; all listened with much attention, their spears and clubs were thrown on one side, and when I wished to assemble my officers and men to return on board, I perceived that they had formed, with the female part of the community, an intimacy much closer than that which brotherly relationship gave them a title to.

The detachment of marines had remained with me; all, no doubt, saw me on my guard against any attacks of the natives, and the probability of my remaining so, perhaps, made them perfectly easy as to their safety.

DESCRIPTION OF GATTANEUAH'S GRAND-DAUGHTER.

While I was using measures to get together my officers and men, my attention was drawn to an object which at the moment here presented itself. A handsome young woman of about 18 years of age, her complexion fairer than common, her carriage majestic, and her dress better, and somewhat different from the other females, approached; her glossy black hair and her skin were highly anointed with the cocoa nut oil, and her whole personal appearance neat, sleek, and comely.—On inquiry who this dignified personage might be, I was informed that her name was Piteeme, a grand-daughter to the chief or greatest man in the valley, whose name was Gattaneuah.—This lady, on whose countenance was not to be perceived any of those playful smiles which enlivened the countenances of the others, I was informed was held in great estimation on account of her rank and beauty, and felt that it would be necessary, from motives of policy, to pay some attentions to a personage so exalted. She received my advances with a coolness and hauteur, which would have suited a princess, and repulsed every thing like familiarity, with a sternness that astonished me.

GATTANEUAH'S VILLAGE ON THE MOUNTAIN.

Gattaneuah, I was informed, at the time of my landing, at a fortified village, which was pointed out to me on the top of one of the highest mountains; they have two of these strong places in this valley, and guarding one of the principal passes. The manner of fortifying these places is to plant closely on end, the bodies of large trees of 40 feet in length, and securing them together by pieces of timber strongly lashed across, presenting on the brow of a hill difficult of access, a breastwork of considerable extent, which would require European Artillery to destroy. At the back of this, a scaffolding is raised, on which is placed a platform for the warriors, who ascended by the means of ladders, and from thence shower on their assailants spears and stones.—The one at which Gattaneuah now was, is situated near a remarkable gap cut through the mountain by the natives to serve as a ditch or fosse, and must have required much labor in the execution; the other is to the right, and lower down.

I had no sooner understood that they had a chief to whom I could address myself, than I felt anxious to see him: a messenger was therefore despatched for him, and after collecting my people, I returned on board, where, shortly after our arrival, I soon found every person anxious for the ship to be got into port and secured. Probably they had heard from those who had been on shore of the friendly reception they had met with, and while I had some thoughts of putting to sea for a favorable opportunity to run in, application was made to warp the ship up, and in a few hours, we had her secured in the bottom of the bay on the seaboard side, near a white sandy beach, and in half a mile of the shore.

When the ship was moored, the shore was lined with the natives of both sexes, but the females were more numerous, waving their white cloaks or leianas for us to come on shore. Many applications were made for me to permit them to accept the invitations, and I found it impossible any longer to resist. The boats were got out, and proceeded to the shore, where, on landing, they were taken complete possession of by the females, who insisted on going to the ship, and in a short time she was completely filled by them, of all sizes and descriptions, from the age of 60 to that of 10; some as remarkable for their beauty as others for their ugliness.

The object of the greatest value at this as well as all the other islands of this group, is whales' teeth; this I had understood while I was on shore, and knowing that there were several of them on board the frigate, I determined, if possible, to secure the whole of them at any price; as I had been informed that hogs, the only animal food on the Island, could be procured for no other article. No jewel, however valuable, is half so much esteemed in Europe, as a whale's tooth here. I have seen them by fits laugh and cry at the possession of one of those darling treasures. Ivory, however finely wrought, bears no comparison in their estimation, and is worn by the lower and poorer classes, made in the form of whales' teeth and ear ornaments, while the whales' teeth are worn only by persons of rank and wealth.

Soon after I sent my present on shore Gattaneuah came on board in a boat which I had sent for him, accompanied by the Chauny.
