

POETRY.

The following lines are extracted from an address of Mr. A. KENDALL, one of the editors of the Frankfort Argus, to Doctor ANTHONY HUNN, late editor of "The Lamp," and "The Light House," which, through the unskillfulness of the physician, have gone "to that bourne from whence no traveller returns." He has lately established another paper entitled "The National Pulse," devoted to Mr. Pope and his party, whose writings are profusely copied into the Lexington federal paper.

STORY OF THE HAT.

From rising sun came Tony Hunn,
And took his course so lucky,
The safe at last his lot was cast
In this good land, Kentucky.

Resolved to illumine old Nature's gloom,
He took the Irish notion,
A 'Lamp' to fill, a 'Light-House' build,
Here far from sea or ocean.

But woe was him! his 'Lamp' burnt dim,
For little oil was brought here—
The fish on land well understood—
And but few whales are caught here.

One lonely night of clear star light,
The Sage from town was lying,
Musing the while how to get off
To feed his 'Lamp' now dying.

At once a scheme like brilliant dream,
Wise Tony's fancy hit on,
More brave and bold, than e'er was told
Of Vandal, Goth or Briton.

A wood he gained, where silence reigned;
His Nag then ceased to snore up,
And listened round to catch each sound,
On tiptoe in his stirrup.

Down then he jumps—among the stumps
One bright in star light glistens;
On top of that, he claps his hat,
And stands again and listens.

Then forth he drew his pistol true,
Charged with the fatal bullet;
When pop went that, down went the hat,
As dead as any pullet.

Scared at the fun, the panthers ruff,
The owls cried out O, Bravo!
Hills, woods and streams threw back the screams,
And echo muttered, Knave O!

With spur in sides, hatless he rides,
Bent forward in full gallop,
On saddle's brim, tossed out and in,
Like little sea-beat shallop.

Now home he comes, and raves and foams,
And swears he has been shot at;
Calls Sam and Nim to go with him,
And look the fatal spot at.

There sooth they found the hat on ground,
But well the boys did grin it,—
'T was shot so low, a fool might know,
No head had then been in it.

I stories long, in language strong,
Hann spread the thing about, sir;
But with such tales could catch no whales,
And so his 'Lamp' went out.

FULLING BUSINESS.

THE subscriber informs his friends and the public, that he intends carrying on the FULLING BUSINESS in Clarke county, Lower Howard's creek, at the mill formerly occupied by William Taylor, deceased. For the convenience of customers, he will attend on the first day of each Court at the following places, to wit: at Wm. Poston's store in Winchester—at Robt. Wood's, on the road from Winchester to Mountsterling—at Capt. Banks' in Mountsterling; and at Stone's store in Richmond. Cloth received one court day, will be returned the next. His Works being entirely new, he flatters himself that he will be enabled to do their work as good and as cheap as any other person. He will also be responsible for all cloth damaged in his care.

STEPHEN MILLER.

Fulling Business.

THE subscribers respectfully inform their friends and the public that they intend carrying on the Clothier's Business in all its various branches, on as good terms as can be afforded in this state. Their Fulling Mill is on Strude's Creek, about two miles below Hornback's mill, nine miles from Paris and nine from Winchester. For the convenience of customers they will attend at Mr. H. BRENT'S in Paris, on the first day of every Court, for the purpose of receiving and delivering Cloth; likewise at Mr. JAMES ANDERSON'S, in Winchester, on the first day of every Court for the same purpose. Having a Fuller equal to any in the United States, they flatter themselves they shall give general satisfaction. Any colour will be made that is required.
